DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Church of the Ascension, Westminster is a small stone Episcopal church built according to ecclesiastical principles. It has a tall, narrow nave (with four lancet windows on the side), a small entrance porch, and a deep chancel. Above the entrance there is an open bell cote. Interior is equally simple with plain stucco walls and wood beam ceiling.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

The Church of the Ascension is a modest, but good example of the type of church advocated by the Ecclesiological Society. The Society published and offered plans by approved architects to Anglican congregations so that, even in a small country church, the proper ritualistic atmosphere could be obtained. The then Bishop of Maryland was very receptive to ecclesiological church planning and Maryland has a number of notable churches of the 1840s and 1850s which were strongly influenced by ecclesiology, e.g. Emmanuel Church, Cumberland and the Chapel at Hannah More Academy in Reisterstown.

Union Churches

Union churches were quite common in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Many times a community whose people consisted of many denominations would support one building to which traveling preachers would offer their services. Considering the lack of funds and organization of each denomination, the Union church provided the alternative until a congregation could afford its own building. The abandoned Union church buildings were often converted into schools, also community supported.

Westminster's Union Church was built on the knoll in what is now Westminster Cemetery in the mid-eighteenth century, replaced by brick in 1818, and demolished in 1891. Among the visiting preachers was the renowned Francis Asbury, a preacher and organizer instrumental in the spread of Methodism throughout the country. The Methodist congregation of Westminster, organized in 1767, used private homes and the Union Church for services until 1839.

Middleburg Union Church, built ca. 1800, also served as a school. The Richard Richards Meeting House, likewise built around 1800, was the first church building in Hampstead.

Other Denominations Organized After 1770

The Anglican, Presbyterian, Catholic, and United Brethren churches in Carroll County were organized after 1770. In 1771 the last Anglican church in Mary-
